

Living with Separation & Divorce

We are Separating and I want to tell the children.
My husband wants to wait. Whose is right?

It is not so much about who is right or wrong. The important things is how you tell them and then you both can do so without arguing in front of the children. There are lots of suggestions in the Living With Separation Book.

The first thing you both need to do is to agree on what you want to say. Depending on the age of the children they probably will be aware that there are tensions in the house so think about how to reassure them that no matter what happens they still have Mum and Dad, who love them very much, and you both will do your best to make a good future for the family.

No matter how you and your husband feel about each other, the children love you both and will always see you as a family. Whenever you tell them you need to keep this to the forefront of your mind. They will want to feel safe and secure with both of you in their lives.
